On Town Point Neck, overlooking the waters of the Little Choptank River stands a handsome Federal farmhouse composed of a two and one-half story, five bay long building with a one and one-half story two bay long wing. It is a frame house, like most in Dorchester County, and is sheathed with champhered clapboard, like Rose Hill, Cecil County, the house adjacent Bullitt House in Easton, and the Kirwen

House on Taylor's Island.

The house retains its original windows with louvered shutters, the doors, with raised panels having the not-so-typical four raised facets to each panel and all of the interior trim. It appears to date from the 1830's in its entirity. The kitchen facade is divided in half by a vertical seam which appears to have been an open way between the dining room and kitchen. It now has a door flanked by two small casements.

Its floor plan consists of a central stair hall with two rooms, and a kitchen seperated from the dining room by the aforementioned passage with a pantry opening off of that. In plan it resembles the Old Woolford Place around the Neck.

All mantels, trim, stair, doors, floors are original though a previous owner applied cheap sheet paneling to the fireplace walls and the kitchen. It is scheduled for removal in the future by the present owner.

On the river side is a leanto porch extending across the entire structure. All chimneys are built on the outside of their respective gables and are typical of the second quarter of the nineteenth century.
